NCIC opens office in Marsabit to enhance peace building in region

BY SEBASTIAN MIRITI (KNA)

The National Cohesion and Integration Commission (NCIC) has opened an office in Marsabit County to enhance peace building initiatives in the region as the government finalizes plans to reinstate the Kenya Police Reservists (KPR) to bolster security effort in the arid and bandit prone county.

The Commission, which has partnered with the International Organization for Peace Building, Interpeace and other stakeholders aims at bolstering initiatives to restore everlasting peace not only among local pastoralist communities, but the entire northern region.

Speaking during the launch, Interpeace Senior Regional Representative for the Horn of Africa Dr. Theo Hollander said the Organization was pleased to note that incidents of violence had gone down after the government took decisive action that included a security operation and curfew.

Window of opportunity

Hollander said this move opened a window of opportunity for the emergence of community driven peace processes at the grassroots level.

He said that the organization conducted a rapid conflict assessment in the county one and half years ago that pointed at fight over grazing resources, mistrust between communities and general absence of the government in the peace initiative among others as key factors behind the inter-ethnic clashes, but which now seem to be gradually subsiding.

“Of essence, we have seen significant efforts from the affected communities to bend the spear and try to reconcile,” he noted, adding that Interpeace was committed to supporting the endeavor.

The peace building initiative is supported by the European Union (EU) and the Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation (SDC).

NCIC Chairman Rev. Dr. Samuel Kobia said Marsabit County had lost over four hundred people to inter-communal violence in the last five years, with Saku constituency being the most hit.
